WASHINGTON, Feb. 28 .- The high officials of the several executive departments of the government, holding positions to which new appointments usually are made soon after the inauguration of a new President, are busily engaged in bringing up the odds and ends of their work preparatory to leaving Washington as soon as their resignations have been accepted and their sucreturn to the homes which they left four years ago and resume the profession which was then interrupted. All of the members of the Cabinet have laid their plans for the future and have put their affairs in such shape as to enable them to return to the walks of private life and pick up their business connections without difficulty. # LINE STILL IN DISPUTE

REPORT OF THE UNITED STATES VENEZUELAN COMMISSION.

Both England and Venezuela Have Better Understanding and Are Ready to Arbitrate.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 28 .- The report of the commission appointed by the President to determine the true divisional line between Venezuela and British Guiana, though a voluminous document, lacks the interest which might have attached to it owing to the fact that the commission did not make a report on the boundary question, leaving that to be determined by the arbitration decided on between the two governments most interested-Great Britain and Venezuela. The report speaks of the difficulty it encountered at the outset on account of the novelty of the work to be precedent to guide it and as its results were a matter of deepest importance. Especial reference is made to the evident desire on the part of the two governments directly concerned to aid the commission in its investigation. Every call for informato. Eulogistic words are spoken of the individual citizens of this country for proffering and furnishing books and pamphlets or other documents in their possession which might seem to have aided in reachlem they had before them. Particular reference is made to the assistance given by Library; Dr. Justin Windsor, of Harvard College; Prof. Franklin James, of Brown University; Prof. Burr, of Cornell University; Prof. James C. Hansom, of the Wisconsin State University; Dr. De Haan, of Johns Hopkins, and Mr. Marcus Baker, of the geological survey. The work of each highly commended and their assistance to the commission gratefully acknowledged. The report states in detail the various documents, papers, maps, etc., which the commission or its agents examined. fore closing the report speaks in the highest praise of the assistance given them by the secretary of the commission, Mr. Malet-Prevost. In conclusion the report says: "May we not properly advert to the fact that, while in consequence of the recent treaty between the two nations specially interested, which treaty was brought about by the active efforts of this government, our own work has been terminated, the commission has been a factor of no inconsiderable importance in the solution of the problem. It may be inappropriate for us to enter into any defense of the action of Congress in authorizing its creation, and yet it may not be amiss to notice at that time there had been developed and was existing no little bitterness of feeling between the people of Great Britain and of the United States: talk of war was abundant and the business interests of both nations were atfected prejudicially by the possibilities of conflict. The appointment of the commission, though it had no absolute power of determining the question at issue, was accepted as affording a means for a full investigation of the question in dispute and for an ascertainment by gentlemen impartial and disinterested of the facts respecting the controverted boundary. The gen Malaxa, but were attacked by insurgents | eral belief that a full disclosure of the facts in respect to this troublesome question would open the way to some peaceful solution of the dispute promptly allayed the apprehensions of war, and all waited until this commission should have completed its examination. Not only was this apprehension of conflict allayed, but each nation seemed to feel that the creation of the commission was equivalent to an invitation to the two contesting nations to appear before the bar of public opinion and make each its showing as to the merits of its claim.

"It is not strange that under the influence of this, each nation proceeded no amine the various depositories of evidence in Spain, Holland, Rome, London, Georgetown and Caracas, for proof of facts to sustain such contentions; and the many volumes of original matter taken from these depositories, which, since the appointment of the commission have been printed, have thrown a flood of light on the quesof historical facts, it would seem that each has become impressed with the conviction that the question is one of such nature as that there is no such absolute certainty of right on the part of either as to justify a mere forcible assertion thereof, and that | and is appointed to his new command by the question is really one calling for judicial examination and determination. A wise and just view of the case is that the commission has been a potent factor in bringing the two nations into a consent to submit the matter in dispute to an arbitral tribunal. We are not blind to the fact that the air to-day is full of arbitraconsummation of such a happy result generally, as well as in respect to this particu-

The method of amendment set out in the Constitution works ler, he said: "We have a general there slowly and awkwardly, but it is a cheap one, which is its only recommendation. There are many defects in the present Constitution that can be readily remedied. It has been in force over ten years longer than the first Constitution. No one can anticipate the benefits of a new Constitution. As an instance, a short provision in the Constitution of 1851 has been of incalculable value. It is this: "Corporations other than banking shall not be created by special act but may be formed under general laws." Let any one examine the previous acts of the Legislature and see the charters on divers subjects; but behind them were many defeated charters that might have been of vast benefit if they had not been defeated by tricks and combinations, which could not happen under the new Constitution. When this provision went into force immediately hundreds of miles of railroads were projected upon important routes by companies that nad knocked in vail at the doors of legislatures for special charters and were defeated by persons who had charters on rival routes. A line from this place to Logansport was defeated under the old Constitution; one from this place to Brookville; one along the present route of the Wabash road. These are a few that I temember as being defeated in one session, every one very important and valuable Nobody anticipated the enormous benefits of this little provision as to corporations,

The present Constitution (Article 16) does not, like the Constitution of 1816, require a vote of the people in advance of the act of the Legislature calling the convention. Nothing is necessary but an act calling for and providing for the convention. This may be done at this session and a constitutional convention assembled within a few months The subjects of amendment are so numerous that the present method prevents proper action. JOHN COBURN.

Indianapolis, Feb. 26. Women on State Boards.

To the Editor of the Indianapolis Journal: In your paper of Feb. 26 there is an editorial on the subject of "Women as Members of State Boards." You say: Women who are insane from physical causes are permitted to suffer and mope in hospitals, wearing their lives out in pain and mental darkness, because no provision has been made by the boards of men managers for giving them proper and scentific treatment. Instead of receiving such treatment they are dosed with anodynes, sedatives and narcotics which tend to destroy what little health they have left.

such an arrangement was made very apparent to me. I resolved then if I ever became superintendent of an institution of this kind a woman would find a place on Cincinnati, through Connersville and my staff as soon as the hospital was arranged and in good running order. Of course, some superintendents have had very unhappy experiences with women doctors. That may be true, but many have had similar experiences with men doctors, A failure upon the part of one woman should not discourage us in the good work. The number of educated, good women in the profession now gives a large field to draw from, and while one may be at times a constitutional convention is a good one. grievously disappointed, that should not Doubtless the advantages of a constitu- make us "weary of well doing." The day tional convention are incalculable is coming it it almost here now when we s coming—it it almost here now—when we will find every insane woman in a state institution for treatment under charge of a doctor of her own sex. This is not an untried experiment. The necessity of such a course ought to be recognized by all people and the results will show for themselves, I do not claim that a woman doctor will cure more insane women than a man doctor. I do not know that the limited statistics on the subject would prove an assertion of this kind. I do not think they would, but that does not matter. The other advantages of a medical woman in charge of her insane sisters goes without saying. They can accomplish much more good on the medical staff of an insane hospital than they can on the governing board of such an institution. I have no objection, however, to them filling that place; in fact, there is no prejudice in my mind against woman occupying any place if she does her duty and is faithful to the trust imposed In the language of Colonel Robert Ingersoll 'she could not get the affairs of the world
